About This Volume

This book is a day-by-day chronicle of 2025. It reprints, in calendar order, every one of the 5,453 event entries recorded for the year on the Current Events portal of the English-language Wikipedia, together with the story headings under which the portal's editors filed them and the news reports they cited.

THE SOURCE The Current Events portal is a collaboratively edited digest of the news. Each day's page lists short, present-tense summaries under subject headings — armed conflicts and attacks, politics and elections, disasters and accidents, and so on — usually with a link to one or more published reports. Entries are written close to the events they describe and are revised afterward. They reflect the judgment of volunteer editors about what was notable, and the coverage of the largely English-language press on which they draw. They are neither a complete record of the year nor a neutral sample of it.

THE TEXT Each day's page was captured at a specific revision, identified in the Register of Source Revisions, and its entries were extracted mechanically, keeping their order, hierarchy and wording. The original wording is retained throughout, including errors of fact, spelling or grammar, and reports that later proved incomplete. Only typographic conventions have changed: straight quotation marks are printed as curly ones, and invisible formatting characters are omitted.

ARRANGEMENT The chronicle is divided into twelve monthly chapters. Each opens with a summary page: a calendar showing how many entries were recorded on each day, the balance of subject categories, and the stories that recurred most often. Within each day, entries appear under the portal's own categories and in the portal's order. Where the portal filed an entry under a continuing story, that heading is printed in italics above it.

SOURCES The news organizations cited for each entry are named in small type at its end; in the digital edition each name links to the cited report. A citation shows what the portal's editors relied on. It does not mean that the report has been consulted for this edition, or that it supports every detail of the entry. 7 entries were left uncited by the portal.

EDITORIAL NOTES A small number of entries have been checked against primary or publisher sources. Where that research supports, narrows, corrects or re-dates an entry, a shaded note follows it; the original entry is never altered. This edition carries 8 editorial notes and 17 scoped checks, each limited to its stated scope and all listed under Editorial Notes and Checks. Every other entry stands as the portal recorded it and has not been independently verified.

COUNTS All counts and charts measure entries in the archive. They describe the attention of the portal, not the scale, severity or importance of events. A single continuing story may produce entries on many days, and a single entry may report several developments.

INDEX The index lists the Wikipedia articles linked from each entry and from the story headings above it, as the portal's editors wrote them, with the pages on which they appear. Titles have not been merged or reclassified, except that, as on Wikipedia, the case of the first letter is disregarded.

PRESERVATION This volume is a reading edition. Its authoritative counterpart is the annual preservation database, which retains the exact source pages, link markup and full citation addresses. The fingerprint of the database used for this edition is printed in the colophon.

Reading an Entry

Every day of the year follows the same pattern. The opening of 1 January is reproduced here with its parts identified.

1. The day
   Date and weekday as given by the portal, with the number of entries recorded that day. Days follow in calendar order; the running heads give the range of dates on each page.

2. Category
   The portal's subject heading, printed as archived. The colored square is repeated beside each entry and in the charts.

3. Story heading
   The continuing story under which the entry was filed. Nested stories are separated by ›. Entries filed without a story heading appear directly under the category.

4. Entry and sources
   The text of the entry, unaltered, followed by the news organizations it cites. Several entries may share one story heading.

Editorial note
Where an entry has been researched for this edition, a shaded note follows it, stating what was checked and what the evidence shows.

- U.S. president Donald Trump announces a universal 10% tariff on most imports into the United States, a 20% tariff on goods from the European Union, and a 34% tariff on all imports from China. The tariffs will take effect from April 5.

EDITORIAL NOTE · COMPLETE

Donald Trump announced additional import tariffs: a 10% baseline scheduled for April 5 and higher country-specific rates for April 9, including 20% for the EU and 34% for China, subject to exclusions.

These are announced rates and dates, not a description of later implementation changes or total accumulated duties. Evidence: White House executive order; White House, Annex I.

SCOPED CHECK · CONTRADICTED

Effective dates of baseline and higher reciprocal tariff announcements.

Source entry conflates effective dates: official fact sheet distinguishes the April 5 baseline from higher reciprocal rates effective April 9. It also lists exclusions; do not generalize the China statement to all goods. Original extraction remains unchanged. Evidence: White House.

Notes on Sources and Method

CAPTURE Each daily page of the portal was captured once, at the revision identified in the Register of Source Revisions, and stored byte for byte with a cryptographic fingerprint. A captured revision may include corrections made after the day itself; the chronicle therefore reflects the record as later revised, not necessarily what was known on the day.

EXTRACTION Entries were extracted from the captured wiki source by a deterministic program, without manual rewriting or model-generated text. Category headings, story headings and entries keep their source order and nesting. Links and citations were captured before markup was removed. No content was silently discarded: structures the program could not classify were recorded for review.

RETAINED NOTICES The extraction program recorded the following notices about source structure. Most were resolved by general rules; none implies a judgment about the accuracy of an entry.

EMPTY MARKER A literal empty bullet on 5 July is kept in the database as an empty marker of unknown role. It is not an entry and is omitted from the chronicle and index.

TYPOGRAPHY Straight quotation marks are printed as curly quotation marks, using their position in the text; an apostrophe-like mark in a name may therefore appear as ’. Invisible direction and spacing marks are omitted. All other characters, including original dashes, accents and non-Latin script, are printed as captured.

NOT INCLUDED This edition does not reproduce publisher articles, images or full citation addresses, which remain in the preservation database. No new reporting, illustration or model-written summary has been added.
